

It starts out as an average day at Dreamhouse, Inc., a real estate agency where Katy Biddlemeyer is showing the ropes to new employee, Dena, while Florence looks for a babysitter for her pet parrot. Dena sees that another realtor, Jody, tends to, well... let's say "twist the truth a bit" in order to close a sale. But the reality of the company's last purchase from a bank is even funnier — along with the house, they also purchased everything in the house, which includes a racehorse and its handsome trainer! Before anyone can say "whoa," Katy finds her office overrun by a sneaky, unforgiving psychiatrist, a demanding landlady and the Better Business Bureau! No wonder the ladies are trying to hide the racehorse in their conference room! The trainer is on the lam because he stole the horse, and now a gangster shows up claiming to own the thoroughbred. Just when things are reaching a fever pitch, Katy's father shows up arguing with her boyfriend. Katy, Jody, Florence and Dena try to juggle this gang by diverting the others into different rooms, making up story after story to keep them apart and even pretending to have the hiccups! Lines fly faster than a winning racehorse in this hysterical, rapid-paced farce that reveals that truth really can be stranger than fiction!
